Workshop Description:

This course will provide a broad overview of innovations in clinical suicidology. There will be an initial focus on context and policy that will then transition into major theoretical models for clinical care of suicidal patients.

There will be an in-depth discussion of assessment approaches (both direct and indirect) and the reliable identification of different suicidal states. Beyond assessment, there will be an in-depth discussion of stabilization interventions, treatments for suicidal risk, and a more in-depth discussion of the Collaborative Assessment and Management of Suicidality (CAMS) developed over 25 years of clinical research by the presenter.

The course will conclude with an examination of brief interventions, malpractice considerations, and systems of care approaches that emphasize evidence-based, least-restrictive, and cost-effective approaches for the full range of suicidal patients across settings.

Please contact us in advance if you require special accommodations on the day of the event.
